This list is intended to be an aid for collectors of naval covers interested in focusing on a collection representing a particular state. It was prepared using the Dictionary of American Fighting Ships (DANFS) as a starting point. Recognizing that DANFS is a flawed document with frequent errors and omissions, the author's own experience and knowledge and other sources were used. Wikipedia, another source that should always be used with suspicion, was one source for cross-referencing. The Naval Vessel Register (NVR) provided a useful reference for cross-checking facts. However, any errors or omissions are the sole responsibility of the author and do not reflect on any source.

As a general rule, only commissioned vessels are listed. However, not all vessels listed as being "commissioned" are listed. The reason is because in the 1800s and early 1900s, some very small vessels were so designated. For example ferries, yachts used for patrol duty, and other vessels that today would be listed as yard craft were "commissioned." Yard craft are not included, unless it is reasonably certain that mail could have been sent or received under that vessel's name (example: Tatoosh YAG-1). As a rule of thumb, since this list is intended to be used to identify vessels that could be sources of mail, if the author did not feel that there was at least some chance of finding a cover from or to the vessel, it was not included.

This list includes only ships named for geographic places, such as the states themselves, cities, counties, towns, mountains, rivers, lakes, and the like. Famous people associated with states are not included, that could be the subject of another list of equal size.

Ships named for places in six or fewer states are listed in each namesake state. Ships named for places in more than six states are not listed, for example: USS Clay (APA-39) and USS Clinton (APA-144) were named for counties in 18 and nine states, respectively.

Some vessels were named after being placed in-reserve, for example landing ships & craft and some classes of patrol vessels. These vessels are listed for the collector to determine for themselves if the vessels should be part of their state-oriented collection.
