TASK FORCE 78 DATA SHEET

By Stewart B. Milstein

As I began assembling my notes for the last part of the 6-part series on Operation Blacklist, I noticed how transport ships were assigned, re-assigned, and transferred in to and out of Operation Beleaguer. Operation Beleaguer was hindered from the onset by a lack of available transport shipping. The landings in northern China had to be postponed until October, 1945 when shipping became available after the landings in Japan and Korea. The 6th Marine Division was based in Guam. It was almost a 3000-mile voyage before the Marines could be landed. The China Occupation Service Medal was not applicable until these ships entered the zone of operations. In contrast, the Okinawa-based 1st Marine Division had a 511-mile voyage.

The ability to sealift Chinese troops was exacerbated by the fact that once a ship had disembarked its Marines, the ship was likely to become a part of Operation Magic Carpet. The military people eligible for discharge needed to be shipped home. There were simply not enough vessels to move almost a quarter of a million Chinese nationalist troops and their equipment. A reduced number of attack transports (APA), troop transports (AP) and attack cargo ships (AKA) were sent to Manila where they loaded supplies and were modified to carry Chinese soldiers. The fact that the 7th Fleet was discharging sailors meant that other personnel had to learn to sail the Landing Ship, Tanks, (LST) that were taking the place of the homeward bound ships of TF 77.

In this data sheet, a ship is listed as often as it was used as a transport, or supported the landings. The list is restricted to ships that had a post office. Thus, the smaller amphibious landing craft are NOT listed. Covers from these ships are seldom seen. The only way to track these ships down would be via their corner card.

There are some long-term issues that resulted from the landing of the Marines and the sealift of Nationalist Forces. The Chinese Communists regarded these landings as interference in China's internal affairs. The post-1949 US "Two China" policy hardened relations between the US and Red China. The 110-mile-wide strait between Taiwan and China has been the scene of 4 major crisis. The US 7th Fleet, based in Yokosuka Japan, another legacy of World War II, has served as a barrier and a buffer between the two nations. Today the 7th Fleet also carries out Freedom of Navigation Operations (FONOPS) in both the Taiwan Strait and among the islands in the South China Sea. China's claim to these islands has not been recognized under international law.
